

Terms of Use of the IOTA website

Islands on the Air (IOTA) Ltd is responsible for managing the IOTA Programme and this website. Whilst every effort is made to ensure that the contents of this website are correct, no representation or warranty is given by Islands on the Air Ltd or its directors and officials, as to the correctness or completeness of the data on this website, as the situation is often dynamic and changing over a wide spectrum of legislative and licensing authorities and may be affected by political, geographical or physical events over which Islands on the Air Ltd and its directors and officials have no control.

Islands on the Air Ltd and its directors and officials encourage and exhort all DXpeditioners and island activators to undertake rigorous health and safety assessments for all activities they carry out and mitigate all identified risks to the fullest extent possible. As Islands on the Air Ltd and its directors and officials are invariably geographically distant from, and not involved in the planning and execution of island activations nor their attendant risk assessments, Islands on the Air Ltd and its directors and officials cannot be held liable for any consequences whatsoever, financial or otherwise, arising from such activations or the use of this website.

The IOTA Programme is grounded on a set of rules which, like all such programmes, are subject to change or variation in application over time. In applying these rules Islands on the Air Ltd always attempts to minimise the resulting effect on amateurs whether participating in the programme or not. Islands on the Air Ltd and its directors and officials cannot be held liable for any consequences whatsoever, financial or otherwise, arising from its application of the rules or rule changes.
